C. Leave the mela alone

D. Hide and wait silently

SECTION B — Short Answer Questions (2 Marks each)

1. Explain how a family can be a support system during both happy and difficult times. (0 Marks)

► During happy times, families celebrate together and share joy, while during difficult times, they offer comfort, help, and encouragement, showing that family bonds provide support in every situation.

2. Why might people from different backgrounds enjoy visiting the same mela together? (0 Marks)

► A mela is often open to everyone regardless of background, offering shared activities like games, food, and entertainment that people from different communities can enjoy together.

3. Explain the role of money management when visiting a mela, using an example. (0 Marks)

► Visitors often need to plan how much money to spend on rides, food, or games, so managing money wisely - like deciding what is most important to spend on - helps avoid overspending.

4. How can learning about festivals from different communities help build understanding and respect among people? (0 Marks)

► Learning about different festivals helps people understand and appreciate other cultures and traditions, which builds respect and reduces misunderstandings between different communities.

5. Describe one tradition that might be common across many festivals, even if the festivals themselves are different. (0 Marks)

► Many festivals involve family gatherings and sharing food, even though the specific customs, prayers, or decorations may differ from festival to festival.

6. Why do you think mela organisers often include a variety of stalls, such as food, toys, and crafts? (0 Marks)

- Offering a variety of stalls attracts people of different interests and ages, making the mela more enjoyable and appealing to a wider group of visitors.

SECTION C — Short Answer Questions (Explain) (3 Marks each)

1. Discuss how family structures can vary between different households, and explain why no single type of family should be considered the "normal" one. (0 Marks)

- Some families may have two parents, while others may be led by a single parent, grandparents, or other guardians.
- Family size can also vary greatly, from small families with one child to large families with many siblings and relatives living together.
- Since families can take many different, valid forms, no single type should be seen as more "normal" than another - what matters most is the care and support within the family.

2. Explain how a mela reflects the culture and economy of a local community, using specific examples of what might be sold or performed there. (0 Marks)

- A mela often features local food, handmade crafts, and traditional performances that reflect the specific culture of the region it is held in.
- Local farmers, artisans, and small business owners may sell their products, showing how a mela supports the local economy.
- This combination of culture and commerce makes a mela an important community event that goes beyond just entertainment.

SECTION D — Long Answer Questions (5 Marks each)

1. Discuss in detail how family, friendship, and community (as seen through melas and festivals) together shape a child's early understanding of relationships and belonging. (0 Marks)

- Family is usually a child's first experience of relationships, teaching them love, responsibility, and care from the very beginning of life.
- Friendships, formed both within and outside the family, help children learn important social skills like sharing, cooperation, and empathy.
- Community experiences, such as visiting a mela or celebrating a festival together with neighbours, extend a child's sense of belonging beyond their immediate family to a larger, diverse group of people.
- Together, these three layers - family, friendship, and community - build a well-rounded understanding of relationships, helping children grow into socially aware and connected individuals.
