Duration : 1 Hr 30 Min

Syllabus: Chapters 1–3 — Family and Friends, Going to the Mela, Celebrating Festivals

General Instructions: All questions are compulsory. For Section A, write the correct option letter.

SECTION A — Multiple Choice Questions (1 Mark each)

1. Which statement best explains why "family" cannot be defined by a single fixed structure? (1 Mark)

A. All families must have the same number of members

B. Families vary widely in structure, culture, and circumstances, but all can provide love and support

C. Only traditional families are valid

D. Family structure never changes over time

2. A mela brings together local sellers, entertainers, and visitors. Which best explains why this combination benefits the wider community? (1 Mark)

A. It only benefits sellers

B. It supports local livelihoods while also giving the community a shared space for enjoyment and connection

C. It has no real benefit

D. It only benefits visitors from other places

3. Why might it be inaccurate to say that all Indian families celebrate every festival the same way? (1 Mark)

A. Because festivals do not exist in India

B. Because regional, cultural, and family-specific traditions cause variations even within the same festival

C. Because only one festival exists in India

D. Because celebrations never differ at all

4. If two communities exchange sweets or visit each other during each other's festivals, what deeper social value does this practice reflect? (1 Mark)

A. Competition between communities

B. Mutual respect, goodwill, and social harmony

C. Avoidance of other cultures

D. Strict separation between groups

5. Which of these best describes the relationship between safety rules and enjoyment at a crowded event like a mela? (1 Mark)

A. Safety rules always ruin enjoyment

B. Safety rules and enjoyment can work together, allowing people to have fun while staying protected

C. Enjoyment is impossible with safety rules

D. Safety rules are unnecessary in crowded places

6. What might be the long-term social impact if children never experienced community events like melas or festivals? (1 Mark)

A. No impact at all

B. They might have fewer opportunities to develop broader social awareness and community bonds beyond family

C. They would automatically become more social

D. It would only affect their eating habits

7. How does bargaining at a mela reflect a real-world social and economic skill? (1 Mark)

A. It has no real connection to life skills

B. It reflects negotiation and communication skills useful in many real-world situations

C. It teaches dishonesty

D. It is only relevant to sellers, not buyers

8. Which best explains why festivals often include both religious/traditional elements AND purely fun activities (like fairs or games)? (1 Mark)

A. This combination is accidental and meaningless

B. It reflects how festivals often blend meaningful tradition with joyful community celebration

C. Fun activities replace all meaning in festivals

D. Traditional elements are always separate from celebration

SECTION B — Short Answer Questions (2 Marks each)

1. Critically explain why defining a "normal" family structure can be misleading, using reasoning rather than just examples. (0 Marks)

2. Analyse how a mela can act as an informal classroom for life skills, beyond just being a place of entertainment. (0 Marks)

3. Discuss why regional variations in how a single festival (like a harvest festival) is celebrated across India might strengthen, rather than weaken, national unity. (0 Marks)

4. Explain the concept of "unity in diversity" using the example of multiple festivals being celebrated within one country, and discuss any potential challenges this diversity might also present. (0 Marks)

5. Evaluate whether strict safety rules at a mela might sometimes reduce a child's sense of independence, and discuss how a balance might be achieved. (0 Marks)

6. Discuss how economic activity at a mela (buying, selling, bargaining) might indirectly teach children about broader economic concepts, even without formal lessons. (0 Marks)

7. Analyse why community celebrations of festivals (not just family celebrations) might be particularly important in urban areas where neighbours often do not know each other well. (0 Marks)
8. Discuss the potential emotional impact on a child who experiences getting lost at a mela, and how well-taught safety practices might reduce this impact. (0 Marks)
9. Explain how the theme of "sharing" appears in both family life and festival traditions, and discuss why this repeated theme might be intentional in how children are taught these concepts. (0 Marks)
10. Critically assess whether visiting melas or celebrating festivals should be considered educational, even though they are often seen mainly as fun or leisure activities. (0 Marks)

SECTION C — Short Answer Questions (Explain) (3 Marks each)

1. Critically analyse how the three chapters (Family and Friends, Going to the Mela, Celebrating Festivals) together represent expanding circles of a child's social world, from the most personal to the most communal. (0 Marks)
2. Evaluate the claim that "diversity in festivals strengthens national unity" by considering both supporting and challenging perspectives. (0 Marks)
3. Discuss how the life skills learned at a mela (money management, safety awareness, social interaction) might connect to skills needed in adult life, using specific examples. (0 Marks)
4. Analyse the role of tradition versus change in festival celebrations, and discuss whether strictly preserving old customs or embracing new practices is more valuable for a community. (0 Marks)

SECTION D — Long Answer Questions (5 Marks each)

1. Write a comprehensive essay analysing how "Family and Friends", "Going to the Mela", and "Celebrating Festivals" together build a child's understanding of belonging - from the personal (family) to the communal (society) to the cultural (festivals) - and discuss why this progression is educationally significant. (0 Marks)
2. Imagine you are designing an activity for younger students (Class 1) to help them understand the value of family, community, and festivals, drawing on ideas from all three chapters. Describe the activity in detail and explain how it addresses each theme. (0 Marks)
