SECTION B — Short Answer Questions (2 Marks each)

1. Explain how a family can be a support system during both happy and difficult times. (0 Marks)

► During happy times, families celebrate together and share joy, while during difficult times, they offer comfort, help, and encouragement, showing that family bonds provide support in every situation.

2. Why might people from different backgrounds enjoy visiting the same mela together? (0 Marks)

► A mela is often open to everyone regardless of background, offering shared activities like games, food, and entertainment that people from different communities can enjoy together.

3. Explain the role of money management when visiting a mela, using an example. (0 Marks)

► Visitors often need to plan how much money to spend on rides, food, or games, so managing money wisely - like deciding what is most important to spend on - helps avoid overspending.

4. How can learning about festivals from different communities help build understanding and respect among people? (0 Marks)
- Learning about different festivals helps people understand and appreciate other cultures and traditions, which builds respect and reduces misunderstandings between different communities.
5. Describe one tradition that might be common across many festivals, even if the festivals themselves are different. (0 Marks)
- Many festivals involve family gatherings and sharing food, even though the specific customs, prayers, or decorations may differ from festival to festival.
6. Why do you think mela organisers often include a variety of stalls, such as food, toys, and crafts? (0 Marks)
- Offering a variety of stalls attracts people of different interests and ages, making the mela more enjoyable and appealing to a wider group of visitors.
7. Explain why staying together as a family or group is especially important in a new or unfamiliar place, like a mela in another town. (0 Marks)
- In an unfamiliar place, it is easier to get lost or confused, so staying together helps ensure everyone feels safe and can rely on the group for guidance.
8. Describe how celebrating festivals with neighbours or community members (not just family) can strengthen a community. (0 Marks)
- Celebrating together helps neighbours get to know each other better, builds friendships, and creates a stronger sense of belonging and cooperation within the community.
9. Why might children look forward to festivals, based on what you've learnt about festival traditions? (0 Marks)
- Children often look forward to festivals because of the fun traditions involved, such as new clothes, sweets, gifts, decorations, and spending joyful time with family and friends.
10. Explain the connection between family responsibilities and a happy home environment. (0 Marks)
- When family members share responsibilities like chores or caring for one another, it reduces stress on any one person and helps create a more cooperative and happy home environment.
11. How might visiting a mela help children learn about their community's culture? (0 Marks)
- A mela often features local food, crafts, music, and traditions, giving children a chance to experience and learn about their community's culture in a fun, hands-on way.
12. Explain why some festivals are celebrated at specific times of the year (like a harvest festival). (0 Marks)
- Some festivals are tied to seasons or events, like harvest festivals celebrated after crops are gathered, connecting the celebration to important agricultural or natural cycles.
13. Describe a way in which friendships (outside of family) can positively influence a child's life. (0 Marks)
- Friendships can provide emotional support, companionship, and opportunities to learn social skills like sharing and cooperation, which contribute positively to a child's overall development.
14. Why is it useful to plan ahead (like deciding what to see or buy) before visiting a mela? (0 Marks)
- Planning ahead helps visitors make the most of their time and money at the mela, ensuring they do not miss out on activities or overspend on things they may not truly want.

SECTION C — Short Answer Questions (Explain) (3 Marks each)

1. Discuss how family structures can vary between different households, and explain why no single type of family should be considered the "normal" one. (0 Marks)
- Some families may have two parents, while others may be led by a single parent, grandparents, or other guardians.
 - Family size can also vary greatly, from small families with one child to large families with many siblings and relatives living together.
 - Since families can take many different, valid forms, no single type should be seen as more "normal" than another - what matters most is the care and support within the family.
2. Explain how a mela reflects the culture and economy of a local community, using specific examples of what might be sold or performed there. (0 Marks)
- A mela often features local food, handmade crafts, and traditional performances that reflect the specific culture of the region it is held in.
 - Local farmers, artisans, and small business owners may sell their products, showing how a mela supports the local economy.
 - This combination of culture and commerce makes a mela an important community event that goes beyond just entertainment.
3. Discuss the balance between enjoying the freedom of exploring a mela and following safety rules, and explain why both are necessary. (0 Marks)
- Exploring a mela allows children to experience new sights, sounds, and activities, which is exciting and educational.
 - However, following safety rules, like staying close to family and being aware of surroundings, is necessary to prevent getting lost or facing danger in a crowded space.
 - Balancing enjoyment with safety allows children to have a fun and secure experience at the same time.
4. Analyse how celebrating multiple different festivals throughout the year (from different communities) can benefit a diverse society like India. (0 Marks)
- Celebrating multiple festivals allows people to learn about and appreciate cultures different from their own, promoting mutual respect and understanding.
 - It also creates more opportunities throughout the year for communities to come together and celebrate, strengthening social bonds.
 - This practice reflects and reinforces the idea of "unity in diversity," where differences are seen as a source of richness rather than division.
5. Explain the relationship between family traditions and festival celebrations, using an example to illustrate your answer. (0 Marks)
- Family traditions often shape how a festival is celebrated, such as specific recipes, rituals, or activities passed down through generations.
 - For example, a family might have a tradition of making a particular sweet dish only during a specific festival, passed down from grandparents to parents to children.
 - This shows how festivals are not just cultural events, but also deeply connected to a family's unique identity and history.

6. Compare the role of family (a smaller, close circle) with the role of community or society (a larger group) in a child's upbringing, using ideas from the chapters studied. (0 Marks)

- Family provides the closest, most direct support and care, teaching foundational values, love, and responsibility from an early age.
- Community and society, experienced through events like melas and festivals, expose children to a wider variety of people, traditions, and social interactions.
- Together, both family and community play complementary roles - family builds a secure foundation, while community broadens a child's understanding of the wider world.

SECTION D — Long Answer Questions (5 Marks each)

1. Discuss in detail how family, friendship, and community (as seen through melas and festivals) together shape a child's early understanding of relationships and belonging. (0 Marks)

- Family is usually a child's first experience of relationships, teaching them love, responsibility, and care from the very beginning of life.
- Friendships, formed both within and outside the family, help children learn important social skills like sharing, cooperation, and empathy.
- Community experiences, such as visiting a mela or celebrating a festival together with neighbours, extend a child's sense of belonging beyond their immediate family to a larger, diverse group of people.
- Together, these three layers - family, friendship, and community - build a well-rounded understanding of relationships, helping children grow into socially aware and connected individuals.

2. Design a plan for a community festival that includes ideas from both "Going to the Mela" and "Celebrating Festivals". Describe the activities, food, and traditions you would include, and explain why each choice matters. (0 Marks)

- A community festival could include stalls similar to a mela, offering local food, crafts, and games for all ages to enjoy together.
- Cultural performances, such as music or dance representing different traditions, could be included to celebrate the diversity of the community, similar to ideas from "Celebrating Festivals."
- A shared meal or sweet-exchange tradition could be added to reflect the generosity and togetherness often seen in festival celebrations.
- Each of these choices matters because they combine the fun, community-building aspects of a mela with the deeper cultural and traditional meaning of festivals, creating an event that is both enjoyable and meaningful for everyone involved.

3. Reflect on your own family, friendships, and any festivals or melas you have experienced. Write a detailed paragraph connecting these personal experiences to what you have learnt in this unit. (0 Marks)

- This is a personal, open-ended reflective answer, and there is no single correct response.
- A strong answer should clearly describe the student's own family and friendships, along with any personal experience of a mela or festival, using specific details.
- The answer should thoughtfully connect these personal experiences to the broader themes learnt in the unit - such as the importance of family support, the fun and community spirit of a mela, or the cultural richness of festivals - showing genuine reflection and understanding.
